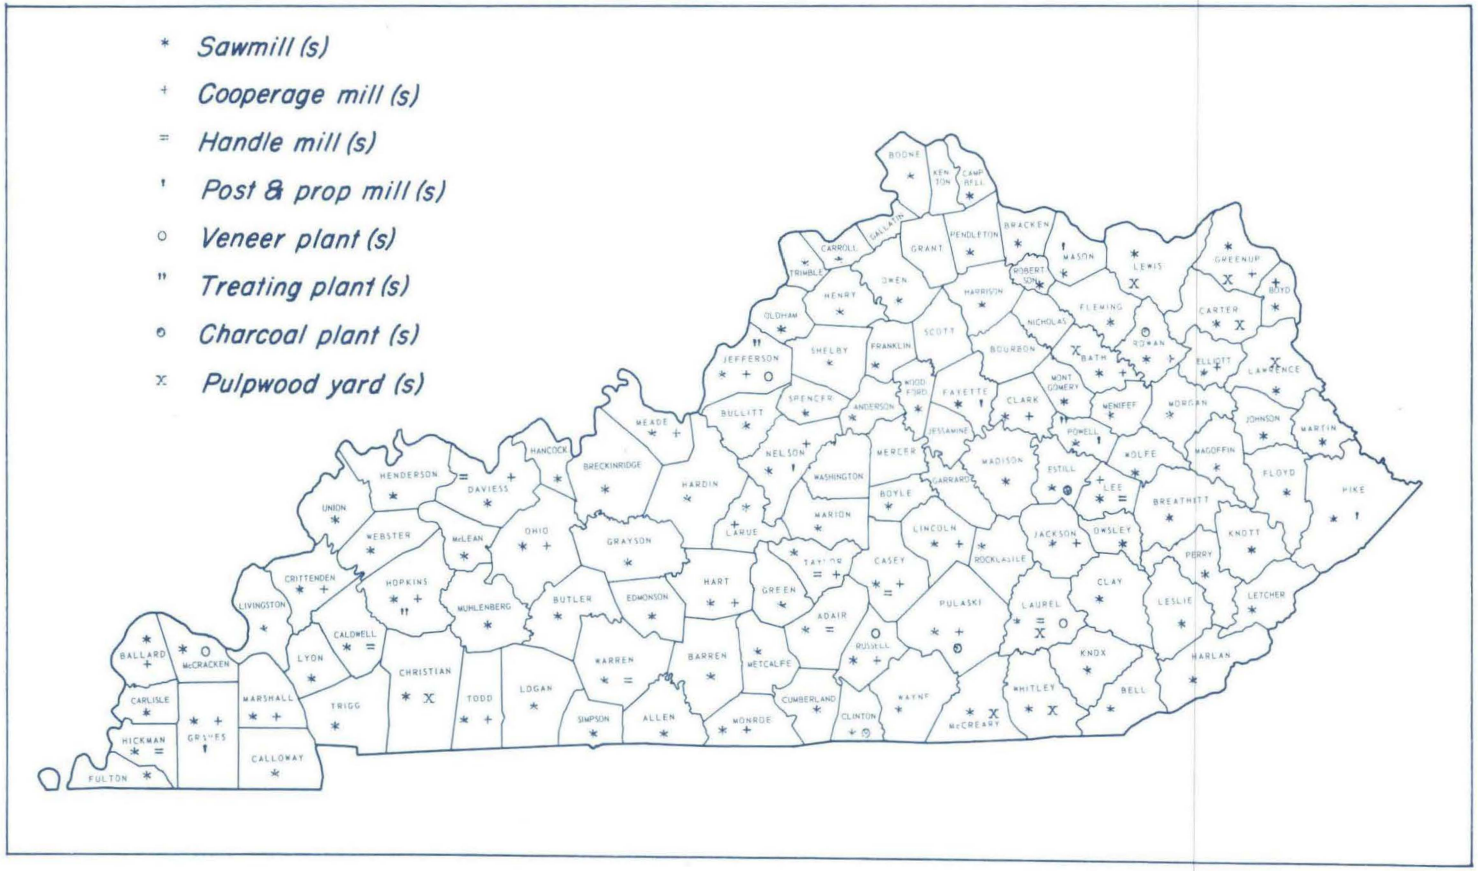
Type of primary wood industries in Kentucky by county.



FOREWORD

Information for this report was obtained from all known primary wood-using firms in Kentucky by mail survey and by personal contact where necessary. Primary wood-using firms are those which draw directly upon the forest resource for their wood raw material in the form of trees, logs, and bolts. This survey is the result of a cooperative effort by the Kentucky Division of Forestry and the Central States Forest Experiment Station, U.S. Forest Service. It is part of the current effort to obtain the latest information on Kentucky's forest resources and the industries which draw upon this supply for their raw material.

Acknowledgment for the Utilization Summary is made to Owen W. Herrick, Research Forester, Central States Forest Experiment Station. Appreciation is expressed to the personnel of the Division of Forestry, Kentucky Department of Natural Resources, for collection of the data which also made possible an up-to-date Directory of Timber Buyers. The Agricultural Extension Service of the University of Kentucky also gave assistance.

Primary Wood Industries of Kentucky

A Utilization Summary and Directory

This publication is designed to serve buyers and sellers of primary timber products doing business within the Commonwealth of Kentucky and adjacent areas. Further, it should be useful to conservation and extension workers, chambers of commerce, and other organizations providing advice on markets available to timber owners and buyers. It also may serve as a reference guide for those interested in establishing new wood-using industries.

The geographic regions referred to in this report are the same as those used in the Kentucky Forest Utilization Survey, a semi-annual market report prepared by the Department of Forestry, University of Kentucky, in cooperation with the Kentucky Division of Forestry (fig. 1).

PRIMARY TIMBER PRODUCTS CONSUMPTION

Kentucky's forest-based industries used 79 million cubic feet of raw material during 1962. Less than 2 percent of this amount was imported from adjoining states. An additional 10 million cubic feet of logs, bolts, and pulpwood were exported from Kentucky for processing at mills in other states.

Sawmills used approximately 92 percent of all wood consumed by the primary wood-using industries in Kentucky during 1962. This represents a volume of about 72 million cubic feet, or 437 million board feet of saw logs (International 1/4-inch log rule). More than half (54 percent) this volume was consumed by 13 percent of the State's sawmills, those that produced 9.6 thousand board feet or more daily (fig. 2). On the other hand, 47 percent of the State's sawmills, those producing less than 4.5 thousand board feet daily, account for only 8 percent of the total volume consumed by all sawmills.

Next to sawmills, in order of importance as users of wood raw material, were cooperage mills which utilized around 4 percent of the total consumption (fig. 3). Approximately 3 percent of total volume was divided about equally between charcoal plants and veneer mills and the remainder between treating plants and other mills (including handle, post and prop, specialty, and furniture-square plants).

The Western and Central utilization regions of Kentucky are leading raw material users, consuming approximately half the 1962 volume (fig. 4). However, species used varied with geographic regions. For example, only in the North-Central Region did black walnut appear as one of the six major species consumed. By contrast, red and white oak were among the major species used in all regions of the State.

MARKETING FOREST PRODUCTS IN KENTUCKY

Primary wood industries, located in 110 of the 120 counties of Kentucky, create markets for the rough timber products of the State (inside front cover). Sawmills, operating in 110 counties, provide the largest and most widespread market. Other timber markets located throughout the State include those for veneer, staves, handles, furniture squares, pulpwood, charcoal wood, mine props, posts, crossties, and poles and piling.

Buying Methods

Sawmills purchase standing timber to supply most (53 percent) of their raw material (fig. 5). Logs or bolts delivered to the mills account for 42 percent of sawmill raw material purchases, while 5 percent is either brought to the mills for custom sawing or is cut from timberland owned by mill operators.

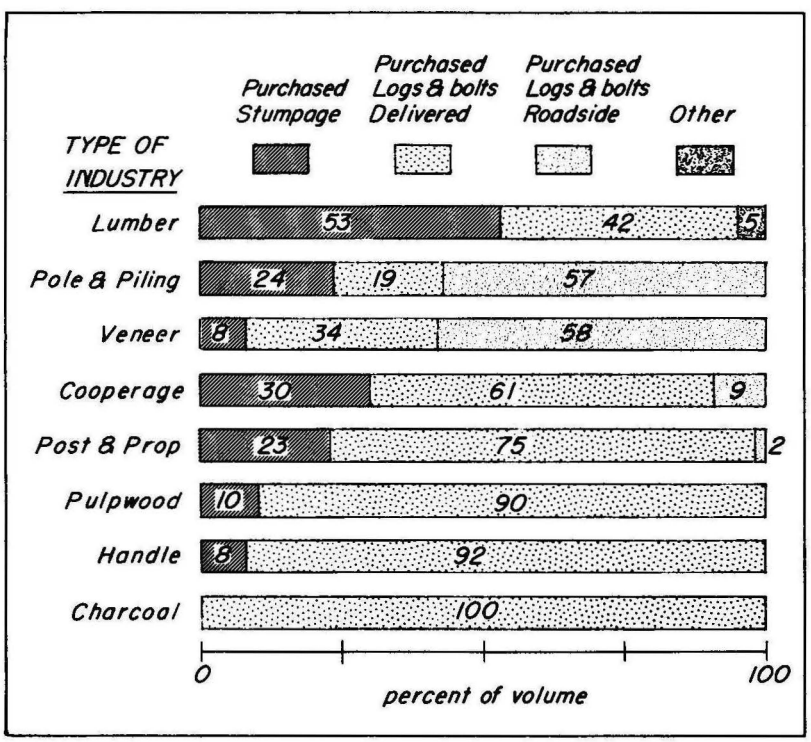

FIGURE 5—Percent of raw material volume obtained by various procurement methods and type of industry.

The other primary wood-using industries purchase logs or bolts as the major source of raw material. Veneer and pole-and-piling firms make most of their purchases at roadside concentration points. The remaining industries rely on purchase of logs or bolts delivered to their mills and yards. Only the charcoal industry depends completely on purchasing delivered wood.

Buying Radius

As shown below, the distance a firm will go to get its raw material is influenced by the value of the product manufactured or by special raw material requirements or both:

Type of Industry	Average Radius of Timber Procurement Area[1/]
	(Miles)
Post and prop	29
Charcoal	30
Pulpwood	33[2/]
Sawmill	38
Cooperage	72
Handle	77
Poles and piling	103
Veneer	245

1/ Weighted by volume procured by individual industry.

2/ Distance to concentration yard.

For example, adequate material for the post-and-prop and charcoal industries is usually obtained locally, within a radius of 30 miles. Only slightly greater distances are needed to supply the requirements for pulpwood (to a concentration yard) and lumber industries. However, this working radius is more than doubled for cooperage and handle mills and extends more than 3 and 8 times respectively for pole-and-piling and veneer industries.

Product Specifications

General product descriptions for the more important forest products follow. However, a prospective seller should contact mill or yard operators for definite specifications before cutting products.

Sawtimber

Although most sawmill operators will buy all timber species of merchantable size, some buyers prefer only certain species. Standing timber should not be less than 12 inches in diameter at breast height. Log diameters at the small end should not be less than 10 inches for hardwoods and 8 inches for conifers. A minimum log length of 8 feet is required. The merchantability of sawtimber and saw logs also depends upon wood quality and the defects present. Excessive sweep, rot, shake, bumps, knots, and holes usually make timber unacceptable as saw logs.

Veneer Timber

Walnut and oak are preferred species for face veneers, while yellow-poplar, sweetgum, and several other species are used for core stock. Veneer for baskets and other containers is made from yellow-poplar, sweetgum, beech, sycamore, and cottonwood.

Logs must be of the finest quality to be suitable for face veneer—straight and free of visible defects. Purchases are usually made by the log, the minimum acceptable diameter ranging from 12 to 18 inches at the small end depending on species and use.

Cooperage Timber

The white oaks are the only species accepted for stave and heading material in Kentucky's tight cooperage industry. Most operators buy intermittently when the market for staves is good, but some mills operate throughout the year. Buyers commonly purchase standing timber, logs, or short bolts.

Cooperage timber specifications are rigid. Standing timber 16 inches or larger in diameter at breast height, and logs or bolts with straight grain and free from bird pecks, knots, checks, streaks, holes, and cracks are acceptable. Stave bolts must be at least 38 inches long. Split bolts at least 12 inches across the chord of the heartwood, measured from the inner edge of the sapwood on one side to inner edge of the sapwood on the other, are preferred. Heading bolts must be 22 to 24 inches long and the same quality as stave bolts.

Handle Timber

Hickory and ash are the primary species manufactured into handle blanks and finished handles. Purchases are in the form of stumpage, logs, and bolts. A bolt length of 40 inches or more is usually required. Logs and bolts should be at least 8 inches in diameter. Suitable timber for handle stock must be straight grained and free of knots, surface defects, and abrupt crooks.

Pulpwood

No pulpmills are located in Kentucky but mills located in adjoining states have established rail woodyards in the State (see inside front cover). Pulpwood is generally purchased from individual producers who deliver to the yards.

Pulpwood specifications differ among purchasing mills. In general, all species of hardwood timber are acceptable at some yards, while at others only dense, heavy woods, such as oak, sugar maple, beech, and so forth, are purchased. Occasionally hickory is accepted, but it is not a highly desired species. A higher price is offered at some yards for peeled hardwood, but peeling is usually not required. Except for white pine, all native species of pine are acceptable at pulpwood yards dealing in pine. Peeling is not required.

All pulpwood must be cut from live trees. Knots must be trimmed flush, and sticks should be straight and not less than 4 inches in diameter at the small end. Charred or blackened wood and rot constitute unacceptable defects.

Charcoal Wood

In Kentucky charcoal wood is purchased by the ton. The industry provides markets for small and low-quality timber and an outlet for slab and trim waste from cooperage, handle, and sawmill firms. Dense hardwoods, primarily oak and hickory, are preferred species for charcoal. Charcoaling operations differ on specifications for length of bolt: some operators purchase only 4-foot wood, while others accept both 4-foot and 8-foot wood. Maximum diameter of bolts is usually limited to 10 inches; however, splitting larger bolts will make them suitable for purchase.

Mine Timber

Mine props and timbers purchased by the piece, ton, board foot, or lineal foot provide a market for straight and sound timber. Hardwoods, such as oak, black locust, and hickory, are desired in some cases, while yellow-poplar or pine are preferred in others. Sizes range from 2-1/2 to 10 feet in length with a 4-inch minimum diameter requirement for short props and proportionately larger diameters for longer props.

Post Timber

Markets for posts are widespread and purchases are usually made by the piece. Preferred species include redcedar, locust, and pine. Depending on the intended final use, post sizes range from 6 to 10 feet in length and 4 to 10 inches in diameter at the small end.

Pole-and-Piling Timber

Poles and piling are purchased as individual pieces based on a system of pole-and-piling classes. Rigid specifications for straightness, circumference at the top and 6 feet from the butt, size and number of knots, length, density, and defect are included in the classification system. Butt peeling is usually necessary although in some instances full length peeling may be required. However, depending upon the final use intended for the product, peeling may not be specified in certain cases.

EXPLANATION OF DIRECTORY

This Directory provides information about markets for standing timber, cut logs and bolts, and products produced in these markets for resale. The contents are presented in alphabetical order by counties under four major headings: Commercial Sawmills, Custom Sawmills, Bolt and Veneer Mills, and Timber Product Concentrators.

Commercial Sawmills are mills selling 50 percent or more of their total production; Custom Sawmills are those selling less than 50 percent of total production. Mills in this latter class typically produce lumber for their own use and/or process logs owned by someone else, sawing such logs according to specifications of the owner.

Bolt and Veneer Mills utilize bolts and/or logs in the production of staves, heading, furniture squares, handle blanks, veneer, and include charcoal wood.

Timber Product Concentrators concentrate timber products such as posts, pulpwood, poles, logs, and so forth, for resale as such and include wood-preservation plants.

Under each major heading, are listed alphabetically the names and addresses of the primary wood-using firms in Kentucky by counties. Where the owner's name does not appear in the title of the company, the name of the owner is shown immediately under the company address. Names are presented without recommendation or preference. Omission of names does not in any way reflect on the integrity of the individual. Any firm not listed who would be interested in being listed in future issues of this Directory should contact the Kentucky Department of Natural Resources, Division of Forestry, Frankfort, Kentucky.

The species of wood each buyer of timber and logs processes is listed in code because of space restrictions. The number code and the corresponding species follow:

Under Method is indicated the method or methods used to acquire material. The first method listed is that which accounted for more than 50 percent of all material acquired.

The Amount heading indicates the volume in thousand board feet the processor is interested in purchasing, the first number being the least volume and the second number the most volume at any one place or time.

Buying Radius is the maximum distance the operator normally will go for his raw material.

The Average 8-Hour Capacity column indicates the mill's daily, or shift, capacity and is intended to inform the product purchaser of the mill's ability to fill orders of various sizes.

The Products column is included to aid the product purchasers in finding suppliers of the items desired. This, plus the Species column, gives the buyers an easy guide as to sources of raw materials.

To facilitate keeping this Directory as current as possible, periodic revision slips will be sent to the holders of the Directory. These revisions will reflect ownership changes, business discontinuance, products produced, and other changes or corrections which are found to be necessary. In this connection, Directory holders are encouraged to inform the Division of significant changes which have occurred.
